Intrinsic Dev and myQ by Chamberlain Group Announce Smart Home Integration Partnership

Northumberland, UK, January 16, 2024 – Today, Intrinsic Dev, a leading software provider to the custom install industry, and global intelligent access leader, Chamberlain Group, announced a new partnership that will provide integration solutions for smart home platforms, beginning with Control4. Chamberlain Group's myQ solution will join a portfolio boasting over 260 drivers (automated actions), spread across 85 leading global brands to date. With this partnership, myQ users have a new option for connecting into their wider smart home systems and dealers will have a robust garage door opener integration for future projects.

myQ turns any garage into a smart garage. More than 10 million people rely on the myQ app to control, secure, monitor, and provide access to their garage, homes, and businesses – from anywhere.

"We're beyond thrilled to announce this partnership. We're well aware of the demand for official myQ integrations in the custom install sector and we're delighted Chamberlain Group has chosen to work with us to deliver these solutions," said Sam Breen, CTO of Intrinsic Dev. "It's been great getting to know the team at myQ, and we look forward to announcing the release of our first drivers together in the coming months."

"This new partnership will provide another integration for homeowners and dealers looking to expand their smart home systems," said Kiel Fitzgerald, Sr. Director & GM myQ Residential Partnerships at Chamberlain Group. "We look forward to working with Intrinsic Dev to further our myQ offering within the custom install industry."

myQ integrations for Control4 and other pro smart home platforms will be released early this year.
